Sanity Next Monday.

Much has been said concerning "a safe and sane Fourth of July." Genuine effort has been made to reduce the casualty list, by prohibiting the sale of devices dangerous to life; and by appealing to the public to desist from taking risks of all kinds. This has been commendable, and is appreciated; but there is need of sanity in other directions, a growing need that must be supplied if the Fourth of July have any real significance. The relation of the Fourth to independent American citizenship has to be impressed on the public mind.

The Twentieth Century has opened with selfishness dominated over patriotism. Great wealth has given great power which is employed more to promote personal interests than public welfare. This power has been so self-sufficient up to the present time, that public welfare has been a minor consideration. The crisis, however, is almost here. The public has borne patiently, but shows signs of weariness and dissatisfaction. The independence of citizenship commemorated by July 4, is likely to result in strenuous protest against the things that be.

The Declaration of Independence has been held by many as a notice served on Great Britain 134 years ago. It was more than that then, and is more now. Its spirit if not its words cries out today against injustice and oppression that have been excused too long. There is tribute to wealth, taxation without representation, the will of the people continually thwarted, an increasing political despotism to which both Republicans and Democrats contribute. Consideration of all these matters is engaging press and people, and what more appropriate time than the Fourth of July, the birthday of our nation, and the anniversary of independent American citizenship.

The sanest Fourth of July celebration that can be devised is one where the people meet for discussing the great questions of the day, questions of such magnitude and influence on national destiny that cannot be safely ignored. Such a celebration would do much toward moulding public opinion, toward reaching conclusions, toward reawakening patriotism. It's intelligence and patriotism that will continue the American republic to still greater eminence among nations—not noise, fun, and something to drink.

Air Pullman's.

Count Zeppelin, in Germany, is proving that if this be the age of young men, it is also the age of men who are no longer young. It is the age for every man, as every age has been. It is preparation and love for a task, and not the number of years, that tell the tale.

The great German aviator, who failed in his undertakings time and time again at a period in his life when many a man might have been expected to say, "Let somebody else try next time," has just achieved the most notable feat in the realm of dirigible ballooning that has ever been recorded.

It is a far cry from the haphazard flights of the antiquated balloon without steering apparatus to the feat which was performed in Germany Wednesday of last week, June 22d, when the Deutschland covered a distance of 300 miles, carrying 20 passengers, and passing over town after town according to a time schedule which had been previously announced.

Such an achievement was inevitable, given enough time, but the important fact is that it was Count Zeppelin finally triumphed. He was a momentarily disheartened old man not many months ago, when one of the big aircraft upon which he had spent his entire private fortune was wrecked.

But he tried again. He put a greater measure of thought and determination into the work—and the thrilling result of the 22d of June is the answer.

No June Rise.

Contrary to the expectations of old river men the "June rise" has not yet materialized. The river is now lower than it has been since the ice went out last March, and has been slowly falling the past several days. The continued cold weather of April, May and June may have had something to do with putting off the June rise, as the snow, which is said to be piled in huge drifts in the mountains where the headwaters of the river originate, melted slowly. As it is there has been no rise of the river this spring and virtually nothing but local rains have aided in keeping the river at almost a stationary stage.
